

Patient relations email archive

Source 3 of the VOC demo: an archive of five patient-relations email replies, each with its key patient concern noted.

Patient relations email archive (verbatim)

Email 1 - Re: My visit last Tuesday

Key patient concern: "It is the waiting, not the care, that makes me dread coming back."

"I want to be fair, the nurse and doctor who eventually saw me were excellent. But I waited nearly three hours in the lobby before that happened, and it is the waiting, not the care, that makes me dread coming back. Please pass that along."

Email 2 - Complaint about ED experience

Key patient concern: "I was never given any sense of how long the wait would be."

"My main frustration is that I was never given any sense of how long the wait would be. If someone had simply told me it would be two or three hours, I could have planned. Instead I sat there guessing."

Email 3 - Follow-up on my father's visit

Key patient concern: "An elderly patient sat untriaged in pain for over an hour."

"My 78-year-old father sat in the waiting room in visible pain for over an hour before anyone even checked on him. For an elderly patient that long without a check-in is frightening for the whole family."

Email 4 - Thank you, but one piece of feedback

Key patient concern: "The fast-track area moved quickly; the main waiting room did not."

"I was sent to your fast-track area and it moved quickly, which I appreciated. But my friend who came in the same night went through the main waiting room and waited hours. The difference was night and day."

Email 5 - Why did I have to register twice?

Key patient concern: "Repeating the same information to multiple staff added to the delay."

"I gave my details at the front desk, then again when I finally got to a room. Repeating the same information to multiple people felt like part of why everything took so long."

Compile this by source, preserve each patient's own words. Five emails, the third source of the twenty-five total patient voices.