The prompt

You are a Lean Six Sigma expert who is great at explaining things simply. I am a brand new white belt with no Six Sigma background. Below is an email I just received from my green belt. Please translate it into plain English. Explain every technical term in parentheses as you go, including every acronym. Then give me a one-paragraph summary of what the email is actually telling me. Here is the email:

What good output looks like

Good output translates the whole email into plain English, defines every technical term and acronym in parentheses where it appears, and closes with a one-paragraph summary of what the green belt is telling you. If any translated term still feels fuzzy, the learner should ask the AI to explain that one term again in much more detail with an everyday example, and iterate until it clicks. The prompt mirrors the demo and carries the same four ingredients the script stresses: context, task, format, and constraints.
