

Why Your Knowledge Matters

The accurate picture of the current state has to come from the people doing the work, and that is you.

The Moment

Around week two or three, a green belt turns to a white belt and says, walk us through what actually happens, step by step. That moment is where the project gets traction or quietly stalls. The team cannot diagnose what is wrong until they know what is genuinely happening today.

What Only You Know

You know things written in no system anywhere. The report runs Tuesday because Maria runs it manually, not because it is scheduled. The third official step almost never happens as documented. There is an unwritten workaround everyone uses because the real tool is unreliable. That knowledge lives in you, and only in you.

Where AI Fits

The trouble is this knowledge is messy in your head, so familiar that parts have gone invisible. The fish does not see the water it swims in. AI asks the right questions one at a time, turns messy narration into a clean numbered list, and drafts a starter flowchart you then correct. It organizes your knowledge; it cannot replace it.

Remember this

Show up with a clean draft, not empty-handed, and the senior belts notice.
